David Denyer

David is a leading authority on organizational resilience and leading change with over 20 years of experience gained in academia, industry and consultancy. He is Professor of Leadership and Organisational Change and Commercial Director at Cranfield School of Management and leads the Cranfield University multi-disciplinary Resilience Grand Challenge.

David operates at Board and executive level, bringing a mix of evidence-based insight, a passion for problem-solving, and pragmatic and practical experience. He helps organizations to build resilience into future strategy and to develop the leadership capability not just to survive but to remain competitive and thrive in disruptive and uncertain times.

Mike Sutliff

Mike is the Project Director, Designer and Executive Coach responsible for the 'Resilience Grand Challenge' initiative at Cranfield University.

I am an experienced designer, facilitator and coach, who has worked at Executive level with international teams.

My Commercial experience includes Key Account Management, Brand Management, Patient Experience Design and Market Access gained across a range of disease areas, in roles of increasing responsibility. I have led matrix teams in the UK, Europe and Globally, delivering Commercial and Organisational Change projects.

I have applied Design Thinking approaches to product and service innovation and strategic planning processes with a diverse range of stakeholders and cultures.

With a passion for continued professional development I have completed an MDes in Design, Strategy and Leadership at Cranfield University and am currently studying for an MSc in Coaching and Behavioural Change at Henley Business School.
